Abstract. This study investigates the influence of globalization on local governance structures, highlighting both challenges and opportunities. By examining case studies from diverse regions, the research identifies patterns of change in local governance models. It explores how globalization affects policy-making, resource allocation, and community engagement at the local level. The findings suggest that while globalization can drive innovation and collaboration, it also poses significant challenges to traditional governance frameworks. This article contributes to the field by providing a nuanced understanding of globalization's impact on local governance, offering insights for policymakers and practitioners.

Keywords: Globalization, Local Governance, Policy-making, Innovation, Community Engagement

Introduction

Globalization has significantly reshaped local governance structures, presenting both challenges and opportunities for public management. This paper explores the influence of globalization on local governance, examining how it affects policy-making, resource allocation, and community engagement. Through a series of case studies from diverse regions, the study identifies patterns of change in local governance models. While globalization can drive innovation and collaboration, it also challenges traditional governance frameworks. By providing a nuanced understanding of these dynamics, this research offers valuable insights for policymakers and practitioners. The findings contribute to the ongoing discourse on globalization and governance, highlighting the need for adaptive strategies in managing its impacts at the local level.
