

Human Rights and International Law Enforcement

Nico Allen

PhD

University of Oslo

Problemveien 7, 0315 Oslo, Norway

Ashley Smith

Dr.

Cairo University

Cairo University Rd, Giza, Egypt

Jesse Brown

Prof.

University of Chile

Av. Libertador Bernardo O'Higgins 1058, Santiago, Chile

Abstract. This article explores the relationship between human rights and international law enforcement, examining how international legal frameworks protect human rights. The study analyzes the role of international courts and organizations in enforcing human rights standards, providing insights into the successes and challenges of international law enforcement.

Keywords: Human Rights, International Law, Law Enforcement, International Courts, Legal Frameworks

Introduction

The protection and enforcement of human rights are fundamental aspects of international law, guiding the development of legal frameworks and institutions worldwide. This paper investigates the relationship between human rights and international law enforcement, focusing on the role of international courts and organizations in upholding human rights standards. Through an analysis of case studies and legal frameworks, the research evaluates the effectiveness of international law in protecting human rights. The findings highlight the successes and challenges of international law enforcement, emphasizing the importance of a robust legal system in promoting justice and accountability.

This is a preliminary version. To read the full version of the article, please purchase a subscription.

References

1. Алиева-Мамедова, Г. (2021). Основные тренды внешней политики Турции в «Новой Большой игре». Вестник Бакинского Государственного Университета, №1, с.105-113.